Only when the fort was in flames and the men in danger of suffocation did they surrender. The outcome might better be termed "an honorable evacuation," since it was General Beauregard's terms, the same as offered prior to the commencement of hostilities, that were accepted.

NEED TO GET TOGETHER.

There is a rumor affoat that Mexico's people will be at peace once more within a month. This insurrection against the Mexican Government, while it has not directly influenced, to any great extent the world's history, it has demonstrated some things of great interest. It has given us one more example of the unfitness of the Spanish speaking people to live and thrive under a popular form of government, proving their temperament as in no way adapted to the task. They institute rebellions, insurrections and all sorts of martial strife, not in order that they may protect their liberties or establish a regime that will be in accord with the progress of good government, but for the sole purpose of acquiring political preference and the spoils of office.

Among a Spanish-speaking people there are always two predominating parties—those who are in and those who are out-those who are robbing the people and those who would do it if they had a chance. Their courts of justice are inefficient because the disingenuous disposition of the people makes it practically impossible to convict a criminal or to establish a misdemeanor. It would certainly be a splendid thing for the advancement and development of Mexico, if some government like the United States, England, Germany or France were to take charge of it and establish a proper sort of progressive government. It would, indeed, be a turbulent task and no nation on the globe, even in order to be so great an aid to the advancement of civilization would be willing to put its head into such a hornet's nest. The Mexicans will be obliged to determine their own destiny

Most of the editorial writers of the United States have pointed to the rebellion in Mexico as a conclusive argument that the time for the disarmament of the nations and the establishment of an Universal Tribunal which would have fulcontrol of international disputes, has not yet arrived. But this perhaps is only true on the surface. The situation if carefully considered will be found to give its evidence on the other side

Mexico hasn't many commercial interests that she might destroy and it would likely be no practical disadvantage to the United States to step over her back yard fence and subjugate the little nation on her southern border. But Germany, England, France, Holland and many of the nations of South America instead of having their commercial interests confined within the boundary of their parent state ad some few colonies over which they exercise sovereignty, are found to have interests that are world wide, and some of the nations we have mentioned have commercial investments in Mexico to the amount of more than a billion of dollars-do they want that interest jeopardized by war between Mexico and any other country? Hardly. The menace to their property interests of fered by the present disentegrating political system has filled them with an alarm that is hysterical. In one chorus they ask the United States if it is not able to bring about the settlement of the rebellion to at least guard its frontier so that fillibuster A expeditions will not be constantly augmenting the forces of the insurrectos, and thus prolonging the strife.

As long as nations interfered only with themselves when they fought, the general influence for peace was small, for two angry governments were likely to think very little about the development of civilization in general and the particular progress of the industrial affairs of any neighbor nation. But now, as evidenced by the attitude of civilized countries, toward this uprising in Mexico no two nations can go to war without arousing a protest from the whole civilized would. This was true during our own Civil War, as witnessed by Luc land's attitude of friendship toward the South in order she might be supplied with cotton, handy enhanging in

"Owen Moore Went Away, Owen Moore Than He Could Pay; Owen Moore Came Back One Day, Owen Moore."

Poor Mr. Owen Moore no doubt lived in a small city or town where he tried to make a living by running a store. The people who were his neighbors in that town and on the farms around town bought most of their things from the great Mail Order houses, neglecting to trade with Mr. Moore.

Quite naturally, Mr. Moore failed in business and went away owing more than he could pay. He had to go away and find a location in some town where the people patronized home merchants.

But the funny poet who wrote those lines was mistaken about Owen Moore coming back one day. Mr. Moore, having been burnt once, would not stick his fingers in the same fire again. No. indeed! Mr. Moore would stay away not because he was Owen Moore than he could pay, but because if he ever came back and started again in business there he would be Owen Moore still. He would let the old town continue to grow street

Many Americans Killed When Madero's Forces Lose Engagement

EL PASO-(Spl.)-Paul Madero brother of Francisco I. Madero, the insurrecto leader; Captain R. F. Harrington of the 'American Legion; Guissepi Garibaldi, noted soldier of fortune; John F. Creer, former sheriff of Lincoln county, New Mexico; Lieu tenant A. Valencia of El Paso; L. G. de Lara, the Mexican Socialist of Los Angeles, and at least 15 other Americans were killed in the fight between Madero's forces and those of the federal at Casas Grandes Monday, according to information which was brought to el Paso tonight by a survivor of the battle, Roy Kelly of Smethport, Pa.

Keily told a thrilling story of Monday's engagement in which Madero's force was defeated. Kelly who was a volunteer under Madero discussing the battle, said:

"The main body under Madero composed of about 800 men, had just arrived from the east Sunday night and was located at a ranch three miles south of Casas Grandes. A column was ordered formed and about 250 men composed it. We marches throughout the night, leaving our horses at camp and arrived on the outskirts of old Casas about 16 o'clock Sunday night.

"We surrounded the town and remained quiet until daylight. I was with the company of Americans led by Captain Harrington. We took the most advanced position on the east side of the town

"The fighting began before daylight Monday and at daylight the federal pany, only five escaped with me. We met Cuellors' force advancing to the relief of Casas Grandes and were cut to pieces scattering into the mountains. I don't know if others e-caped but I was told 15 Americans were killed

"About 30 of our members were wounded and could not get away. Whether all were killed I cannot say

"I saw young Madero and Major Garibaldi cut down while we were a tempting to retreat and I was told by an American residing at Casas Grandes that de Lara, Creer and Vatencia also perished. They were all in Major Gartbaldt's force and were clain trying to get away when Madero's main body falled to come to our support.

"The came American told me that Madero himself with 550 men of his command retired after the first clash with Colonel Cuellors and evidently made little effort to save the where the American camp had been and escaped."

Kelly knew nothing of the report constitution," etc. given out by the junta leaders here to. Of course, you've day that Madero, after reorganizing So have I. #### Lace Covered Pins

Now that crocheting and Irish lace have become a fad, the girl with many leisure moments spends much of her time making dainty laces if she is skilled at this sort of work. One of the most effective forms of this work is the crocheting of covers for little gold collar pins, and while the lacemaker can cover six of these pins in very little time, if she attempts to buy the covered pins at one of the shops she will pay a pretty price for them.
